or supernatural themes Of these Dick Turpin was a favourite of Ainsworth During his childhood he adopted Jacobean ideas and held Tory ideas in addition to his Jacobite sympathies even though his community was strict Whig and Nonconformist During this time Ainsworth began to write prolifically The Ainsworth family moved to Smedly Lane north of Manchester in Cheetham Hill during 1811 They kept the old residence in addition to the new but resided in the new home most of the time The surrounding hilly country was covered in woods which allowed Ainsworth and his brother to act out various stories When not playing Ainsworth was tutored by his uncle William Harrison In March 1817 he was enrolled at Manchester Grammar School which was described in his novel Mervyn Clitheroe The work emphasised that his classical education was of good quality but was reinforced with strict discipline and corporal punishment Ainsworth was a strong student and was popular among his fellow students His school days were mixed his time within the school and with his family was calm even though there were struggles within the Manchester community the Peterloo Massacre taking place in 1819 Ainsworth was connected to the event because his uncles joined in protest at the incident but Ainsworth was able to avoid most of the political after effects During the time he was able to pursue his own literary interests and even created his own little theatre within the family home at King Street Along with his friends and brother he created and acted in many plays throughout 1820 During 1820 Ainsworth began to publish many of his works under the name Thomas Hall The first work a play called The Rivals was published on 5 March 1821 in Arliss s Pocket Magazine Throughout 1821 the magazine printed seventeen other works of Ainsworth s under the names Thomas Hall H A or W A The genre and forms of the work greatly varied with one being a claim to have found plays of a 17th century playwright William Aynesworthe which ended up being his own works This trick was later exposed In December 1821 Ainsworth submitted his play Venice or the Fall of the Foscari to The Edinburgh Magazine
