Celtic speech It does not follow that all the races which spoke a form of the Celtic tongue a tongue of the Indo European family were all of the same stock Indeed ethnological and arch ological evidence tends to establish clearly that in Gaul and Britain for example man had lived for ages before the introduction of any variety of Aryan or Indo European speech and this was probably the case throughout the whole of Western and Southern Europe Further in the light of comparative philology it has now become abundantly clear that the forms of Indo European speech which we call Celtic are most closely related to those of the Italic family of which family Latin is the best known representative From this it follows that we are to look for the centre of dissemination of Aryan Celtic speech in some district of Europe that could have been the natural centre of dissemination also for the Italic languages From this common centre through conquest and the commercial intercourse which followed it the tribes which spoke the various forms of Celtic and Italic speech spread into the districts occupied by them in historic times The common centre of radiation for Celtic and Italic speech was probably in the districts of Noricum and Pannonia the modern Carniola Carinthia etc and the neighbouring parts of the Danube valley The conquering Aryan speaking Celts and Italians formed a military aristocracy and their success in extending the range of their languages was largely due to their skill in arms combined in all probability with a talent for administration This military aristocracy was of kindred type to that which carried Aryan speech into India and Persia Armenia and Greece not to speak of the original speakers of the Teutonic and Slavonic tongues In view of the necessity of discovering a centre whence the Indo European or Aryan languages in general could have radiated Eastwards as well as Westwards the tendency to day is to regard these tongues as having been spoken originally in some district between the Carpathians and the Steppes in the form of kindred dialects of a common speech Some branches of the tribes which spoke these dialects penetrated into Central Europe doubtless along the Danube and from the Danube valley extended their conquests together with their various forms of Aryan speech into Southern and Western Europe
