

Chapter 13 Guided Reading: Family Assessment

Read the introduction.

Read Family Nursing Practice. What is family focused nursing care?

Family nursing practice requires that the nurse understands the reciprocal relationship among individuals and their family and addresses both the health of individual members and the functioning and health of the family. Family-focused care should be practiced across the lifespan.

Read box 13.1. What competencies should the nurse possess to be a family nursing generalist?

1. Enhance and promote family health.
2. Focus nursing practice on families' strengths; the support of family and individual growth; the improvement of family self-management abilities; the facilitation of successful life transitions; the improvement and management of health; and the mobilization of family resources.
3. Demonstrate leadership and systems thinking skills to ensure the quality of nursing care with families in everyday practice and across every context.
4. Commit to self-reflective practice based on examination of nurse actions with families and family responses.
5. Practice using an evidence-based approach.

Reading Understanding Family and the Definitions of Family. What constitutes a family?

- "people [who are] living together and are related by birth, adoption, or marriage"
- One broad definition of family is "two or more persons who are joined together by bonds of sharing and emotional closeness ... who identify themselves as being part of the family"

Read Changes in family structure. Read each subtitle, single parent, blended, cohabitating, gay and lesbian, homeless. How do these groups differ from the traditional model? Are there any challenges identified.

- both above definitions of family have characteristics of living in a diverse society that includes groups of different ethnic, religious, or political backgrounds. Both definitions clearly indicate that individual people determine their status as family. An advantage to these definitions is that the ideal of what constitutes family includes groups that 50 years ago would not be recognized as such (e.g., gay and lesbian families, cohabiting partners, and single-parent families). However, sociologic trends make describing
