documentation.

The steering system is a dual circuit, closed center type and uses hydraulic oil for its operation. Oil flow through the steering system is blocked unless the steering wheel is turned. The flow through the steering gear is caused by the priority valve, which then allows additional oil flow to the steering system.

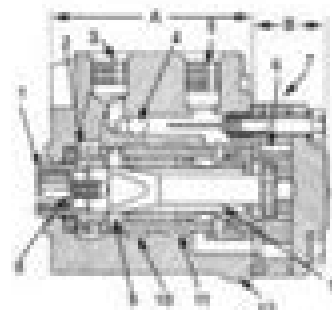

Hydraulic oil is pulled from hydraulic tank (12) through a filter to hydraulic pump (11). The pump sends the oil through line (4) to priority valve (3). When the steering unit is in full/turn, position, pressure in line (10) and the priority valve internal sensing the flow. When the pressure rises more than load sensing signal tank (13) the priority valve redirecting liquid flow to stop oil flow to the steering unit. Oil flow goes off to the hydraulic control valve.

When the steering gear is raised, oil starts to flow to steering cylinder (6). The pressure in line (7) and the priority valve internal sensing line (8) drops. As pressure drops in these lines, the priority valve metering spool shifts left to meet the flow demand. As the metering spool shifts, more oil flow is directed to lines (7) than to lines (8). The priority valve metering spool shifts back and forth to meet the steering flow demand while maintaining the Load Sensing Pressure between the set point (5) and the priority valve internal sensing line. At times flow to lines (8) will be almost complete, the combination of flow toasters in the flow and sensing section of the priority valve metering spool work together to maintain the balance.

There were also 2 in the flooring unit to prevent all flow back to priority valve (3), which could cause a blocked side of the flooring wheel.

Water vapor is moving past your body all day. If the moving pressure goes above about one pound per square foot,

The steering will have two main sections: control section (a) and pump or recovery section (b). These two sections work together to send oil to the steering cylinder.

Shift the priority value across the steering until through turn (5) into the control section, when the steering wheel is turned, the control section sends the id to and from the balancing section, and also to and from the electric motor.

The rotating section is a small hydraulic pump. It rotates the oil that goes to the steering cylinder. The steering cylinder is turned faster, there is an increase in the flow of oil to the steering cylinder. This increased flow causes the steering cylinder to turn faster and faster. As the steering cylinder moves faster, more oil can flow from the rotating section to the steering cylinder and a faster turn is made.

When the steering wheels are turned for a right turn, pump 49 flows into the 27/32-inch LHM7 through inlet 25 and passage 74. From passage 74, it goes into the petcock through passage 77, with the steering wheel turning, petcock 78 is turning and pumping 49. The tapered flow comes out through passage 79, where it is directed out to the steering cylinder through pipe 44 and 45. After the steering wheel started to turn, spool 72, pin 46 and drive 73 also started to turn. Sleeve 22 did not start to turn at the same time as the spool because the diameter of the holes in the sleeve are slightly larger than the diameter of pin 46. The sleeve spool 72 is turn inside of sleeve 22, enough to put the steel holes in sleeve 22 in line with the grooves in spool 72. The alignment of the steel holes in the sleeve with the grooves in the spool provides the path for oil flow to petcock 78 and also to the steering cylinder. Centrifugal springs 48 are compressed when the spool moves in tandem to the sleeve. When the steering wheel is no longer turning, the springs 48 bring the spool and sleeve back to a full-off position. This means that the wheels will stay in the position they were in when the steering effort stopped. The steering wheel can be turned in the opposite direction to bring the wheels back to straight ahead, or to make a left turn. As the wheel oil goes out to the cylinder through hole 71 for a right turn, return oil from the cylinder is coming back into the 27/32-inch LHM7 through outlet 70. This oil is used to the same
