■ Y/P converter from Silicon Optics, Inc.

The DVD-3930CI uses the 10-bit Y/P converter "TDA9913C" developed through a joint development effort that merged image processing algorithms of Silicon Optics, Inc., and Denon Video Technology as the foundation of an image processing device from Denon, a manufacturer of video processing for broadcast use in the United States. This 10-bit processing offers high conversion performance and dramatically improves system compatibility. Flagship in point test patterns are easily and accurately detected not only in the 7:5 pattern of film sources but in other patterns as well during Y/P processing/Progressive conversion. Even when sources contain both Video mode and Film mode material, each mode is detected and processed separately at high speed. Filter caused by detection delay is avoided, and Progressive playback with high picture quality is possible from a variety of discs. In addition, Multi-Channel Channel Filter (MCCF) technology, used for the first time in the DVD-3930CI, which accurately detects and corrects the chroma of all lines in each color band to avoid "jagged" that usually appears when video sources are Y/P converted, ensuring smooth picture playback.

■ Denon Pixel Image Correction for more natural contour correction

This Denon Pixel Image Correction feature that introduces original Denon anti-aliasing technology and makes high-definition video correction possible, has been advanced to every graphic height. In the DVD-3930CI, Denon Pixel Image Correction performs detection and correction through 5 to 6-bit processing to significantly improve contour correction. This new contour correction circuit uses advanced processing technology that also considers the influence of pixels surrounding the target pixels. It uses new algorithms for sample and analysis of a total of 9 pixels of video data around, and including each target pixel, video images are detected and processed by vertical, horizontal, and diagonal sections. At a highly detailed pre-set level for picture contours that are usually more natural. Luminance and chroma signals are also processed with the same algorithms to eliminate ringing noise and other artifacts that easily occur during chroma processing. By performing the type of processing that is most effective for the current video image, the picture is free of degradation and appears more natural.

■ High-performance video scaler capable of 1080p output for HDMI

"TDA9913C" also works as the high-performance video scaler in the DVD-3930CI. This high-precision 10-bit scaler works with HD/SD digital video output signals. This scaler executes optimum conversion to suit the output. Users can enjoy the best picture quality for their particular system. Moreover, scaler can output PCM stereo audio via HDMI and DVI signals.

■ Dual Diacritic Video Circuit (DDVC)

The DVD-3930CI is video circuit features Denon's own DDVC technology designed to enhance the quality of video signals. The use of dedicated circuits -- one independent block for composite and S-video signals, another block for component signals -- and a dual DDVC configuration with built-in video encoder -- has made it possible to process detail-rich video images with greater precision. In order to bring out the maximum quality from both video and audio signals, the DVD-3930CI has a devoted configuration in which the video, audio, and digital blocks that comprise this universal player are all completely isolated from each another in terms of their circuit configuration, supply, and power supply. Denon engineers have used the expertise gained from their development of audio universal players to design a configuration that thoroughly suppresses mutual interference among the circuits and prevents noise from affecting the video and audio signals.

■ High-speed, high-precision 14-bit 219-Ad for video DAC

To ensure that high-precision video signals from the latest high-performance LP converter are reproduced with utmost clarity, in the original analog, the DVD-3930CI has a completely fast and accurate 14-bit, 219-Ad for video DAC. Discouraging of the for Progressive and 1080p for interlaced signals results in sharp, detailed graphics. Component S-video and component signals each have their own dedicated video DAC, a design that enhances the reproduction of low-level video signals and reproduces high definition images that are faithful to the original. In addition, Denon Shaped Video (DSV) technology is used to improve the S/N of video signals and further to avoid their loss.

■ Keystone

DVD-3930CI corrected keystone, with 10 degrees for vertical and with 40 degrees for horizontal for front perspective.

■ Supports fine picture quality adjustments

Including the DDVC feature, a total of 10 picture quality adjustments are provided, including contrast, brightness, saturation, dynamic level, noise reduction settings, and gamma. All of the combinations of settings can be set stored in memory, giving the user freedom to adjust picture quality in considerable detail according to individual preferences.
