The Central Idea of Christianity (Classic Reprint) Jesse T. Peck, 2015-07-08 Excerpt from The Central Idea of Christianity

A volume of the author's published and unpublished writings on the Central Idea of Christianity has been frequently and urgently called for and after mature consideration he does not feel at liberty longer to withhold it. He has written and ventured to approach the public through various periodicals upon different branches of this subject at intervals during the last eight or ten years. His discussions and appeals have been designed to meet some pressing emergency to aid in correcting some serious evil and so far as practicable contribute to the healthy spiritual growth of the Church. He was at length quite surprised to find that in this irregular way he was really writing a book. Some of his friends noticed this and urged him to give it permanent form intimating indeed in the event of his refusal an idea of doing it for him. He thought it much better to be his own editor especially as important portions of the discussion were in the form of unpublished manuscript and other connecting links absolutely indispensable must be prepared with caution and special adaptation to a general plan.
