The critical nature of chokes in drilling operations led Cameron to develop the CAM30-DC multitrim drilling choke, which presents a simple method of deploying actuated and manual equipment as operations evolve. Designed for adaptability, the CAM30-DC choke valve features a modular design, easily interchangeable trim styles, and manual and actuated configurations. Adaptation from a manual to an actuated choke does not require choke disassembly, enabling minimal downtime on the drilling manifold.

The gate-and-seat trim can be easily replaced with the external floating sleeve trim for greater control and erosion resistance. Multiple actuation options—from manual handwheel to variable speed electric actuation—are also offered. The CAM30-DC choke offers up to a maximum of 2-in. orifice size. A common choke body across the CAM30 series of valves ensures direct interchangeability.

The choke is especially advantageous in MPD and dual-gradient drilling operations because changing trims helps to successfully regulate well pressure and cope with risks from gas entrained in the drilling mud. The valve is built with trim parts made of highly erosion-resistant, hard materials, such as tungsten carbide, which resists wear and erosion much longer compared with other materials in severe service environments.
