

Marine Applications

Pressure test and leak test engines are rated at a different horsepower output and speed (rpm) for the same model engine, due to the continuous duty requirements of the work load. Refer to Table 2-2. Engine break-in, pre-starting checks and operation follow "General Operating Instructions" and include the specific instructions listed below.

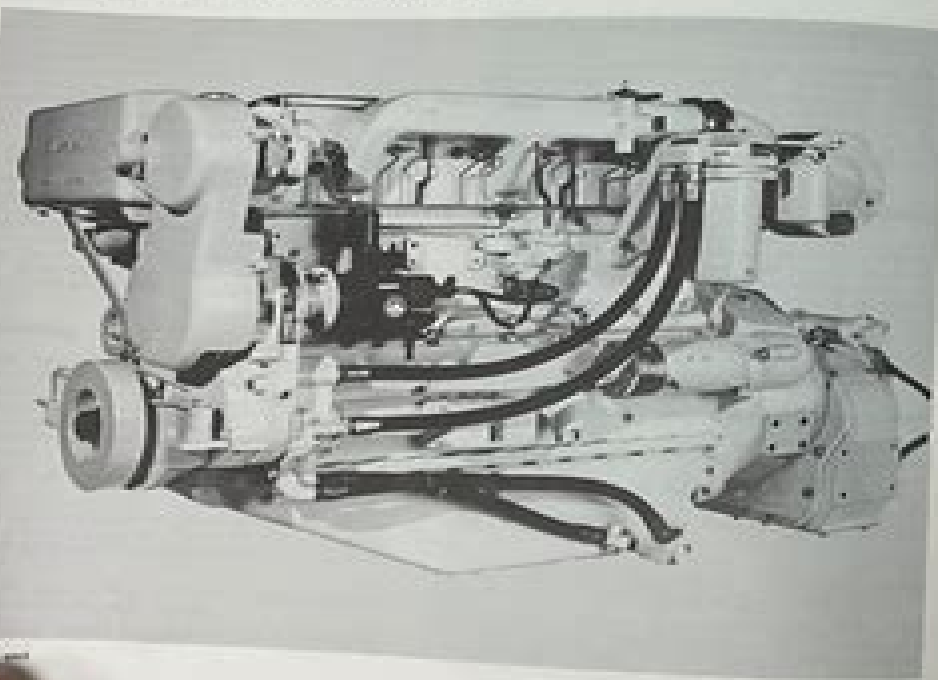

Prestarting Checks

Check marine gear oil level. The marine gear is a separate unit and carries its own lubrication. Fill housing through filler tube to high level mark on dipstick gauge with correct viscosity of oil according to specification plate on gear housing.

Check Fresh Water System

Fill fresh water expansion tank of heat exchanger with coolant or antifreeze to about one inch from top of tank. This will allow room for expansion when coolant gets warm and eliminates overflow. See Page 2-18 for coolant treatment.

Open Seastocks

1. Check for obstructions and clear as required.
2. Open seawater inlet and outlet valves to permit seawater flow through heat exchanger.

Starting Procedure

Place marine gear in neutral position and follow general starting procedure and other instructions as follows:

Check Marine Gear Oil Level

Check oil level of marine gear daily. Keep oil level at or near "H" mark as possible. See manufacturers manual for oil specifications.

Note: Thruster operates marine gear with oil level below the "L" mark or above the "H" mark on the dipstick.

Operate By The Instruments

1. Tachometer. Do not operate the engine above governed rpm. Excessive engine speeds are dangerous and may lead to engine failure.
2. Oil temperature gauge. The oil temperature gauge may read as high as 240°F with the engine at sustained load operation. Under heavy load conditions, lubricating oil temperature may reach 260°F for a short period. However, a sudden increase in oil temperature which is not caused by load increase is a warning of possible mechanical failure and should be investigated at once.
3. Coolant temperature gauge. A minimum temperature of 90°F indicates that cylinder liners are heated to the proper temperature to support good combustion. Engines should be warmed up slowly before applying full load so pistons will not expand faster than the cylinder liners. (Pa-se and liner scoring is often caused while the engine is cold. In the late, the cylinder and compression, thereby distorting piston, properly expanding in both seawater and water. It is also whenever able to expand up to a maximum of 200°F. require mechanical strength from water pump, a strong water pump, plugged and so

4. Oil pressure gauge. The lubricating oil pressure, by oil loss of oil pressure, pressure may drop to 20-25 PSI for a short period.

Caution: Any sudden loss of oil pressure may lead to mechanical failure and
