The studies offered in the book explore a range of important issues including agricultural and land use policies that systematically disadvantage Native American, African American, Latino, and Asian American farmers and farmworkers; access problems in both urban and rural areas; efforts to create sustainable local food systems in low income communities of color; and future directions for the food justice movement. Nurturing Food Justice Alison Hope Alkon, Julian Agyeman, 2026-02-03 Food Justice Robert Gottlieb, Anupama Joshi, 2013-01-25. The story of how the emerging food justice movement is seeking to transform the American food system from seed to table. In today's food system, farm workers face difficult and hazardous conditions, low income neighborhoods lack supermarkets but abound in fast food restaurants and liquor stores, food products emphasize convenience rather than wholesomeness, and the international reach of American fast food franchises has been a major contributor to an epidemic of globesity. To combat these inequities and excesses, a movement for food justice has emerged in recent years seeking to transform the food system from seed to table. In Food Justice, Robert Gottlieb and Anupama Joshi tell the story of this emerging movement. A food justice framework ensures that the benefits and risks of how food is grown and processed, transported, distributed, and consumed are shared equitably. Gottlieb and Joshi recount the history of food injustices and describe current efforts to change the system, including community gardens and farmer training in Holyoke, Massachusetts; youth empowerment through the Rethinkers in New Orleans; farm-to-school programs across the country; and the Los Angeles school system's elimination of sugary soft drinks from its cafeterias. And they tell how food activism has succeeded at the highest level: advocates waged a grassroots campaign that convinced the Obama White House to plant a vegetable garden. The first comprehensive inquiry into this emerging movement, Food Justice addresses the increasing disconnect between food and culture that has resulted from our highly industrialized food system. Cultivating Food Justice Education, 2013. Farmers' markets, Community Supported Agriculture, shares, and food-focused books, documentaries, and television shows have experienced an obvious boom in presence and popularity in recent American history. Food system issues of nutrition, pesticides, additives, food safety, obesity, labor, and environment, among many others, are increasingly the focus of food-oriented initiatives and community programs. Whether this increased focus on local, organic, and alternative food constitutes an activist movement or not is still up for debate; see Starr 2006. Nonetheless, it is hard to deny that interest in alternative food sources and systems is on the rise. However, some activists are now acknowledging that many of the proposed solutions to these issues are overlooking the multitude of justice issues embedded in the global food system. Growing Hope Alexa Weik von Mossner, 2025-02-28. Growing Hope takes a closer look at how such narratives can carry the promise of a better future in the face of grim realities. It brings together two kinds of narratives that are rarely considered in conjunction.

stories about urban community gardening and stories about vegan food justice It shows that there is much common ground between these movements and that the stories told by them are worth exploring as part of a larger narrative about creating a better and more equitable future In the United States this is especially true for the stories told by and about people of color and their historically marginalized communities Employing an econarratological approach informed by critical food studies environmental justice ecocriticism and transmedia studies Growing Hope explores a selection of narratives about people who fight against food injustice and the ideologies sustaining it stories about defiant gardening and culinary self empowerment

Growing Gardens, Building Power Justin Sean Myers, 2022-10-14 Across the United States marginalized communities are organizing to address social economic and environmental inequities through building community food systems rooted in the principles of social justice But how exactly are communities doing this work why are residents tackling these issues through food what are their successes and what barriers are they encountering This book dives into the heart of the food justice movement through an exploration of East New York Farms ENYF one of the oldest food justice organizations in Brooklyn and one that emerged from a bottom up asset oriented development model It details the food inequities the community faces and what produced them how and why residents mobilized to turn vacant land into community gardens and the struggles the organization has encountered as they worked to feed residents through urban farms and farmers markets This book also discusses how through the politics of food justice ENYF has challenged the growth oriented development politics of City Hall opposed the neoliberalization of food politics navigated the funding constraints of philanthropy and the welfare state and opposed the entrance of a Walmart into their community Through telling this story Growing Gardens Building Power offers insights into how the food justice movement is challenging the major structures and institutions that seek to curtail the transformative power of the food justice movement and its efforts to build a more just and sustainable world

More Than Just Food Garrett Broad, 2016-02-09 Raising concerns about health the environment and economic inequality critics of the industrial food system insist that we are in crisis In response food justice activists based in marginalized low income communities of color across the United States have developed community based solutions to the nation s food system problems arguing that activities like urban agriculture cultural nutrition education and food related social enterprises can be an integral part of systemic social change Highlighting the work of Community Services Unlimited a South Los Angeles food justice group founded by the Black Panther Party More Than Just Food explores the possibilities and limitations of the community based approach offering a networked examination of the food justice movement in the age of the nonprofit industrial complex Provided by publisher
