

Identify the financial statements of a business

Financial statements show how a company is run. It provides insight into how much and how a company generates revenue, operating costs, cash management efficiency, and assets and liabilities. Financial statements provide all the details about how well a company is managing itself.

Financial statements are written records that reflect a company's operations and financial performance. Financial statements are often audited by government agencies, accountants, companies, etc. for accuracy and for tax, financing or investment purposes. The main financial statements of income include balance sheet, income statement, cash flow statement and statement of changes in equity. Nonprofits use similar but different degrees.

Businesses use balance sheets, income statements, and cash flow statements to manage their operations and provide transparency to their stakeholders. All three statements are interrelated and create different perspectives on the company's activities and performance.

Accounting principles apply to all businesses, big or small

The procedural part of accounting -- recording business transactions to preparing annual financial statements -- is a universal process. Companies around the world use this process as part of their normal business operations. In performing these steps, the timing and rate at which transactions are recognized and subsequently reflected in the financial statements are determined by the company's generally accepted accounting principles.

Auditors must follow the same practice in all accounting periods and in all external profit and loss statements. When accountants change their accounting practices, those changes must be explained and justified in a footnote to your company's income statement.

Accountants commit to applying the same standards from one period to the next throughout the reporting process to ensure financial comparability between periods. Auditors should fully disclose and explain the reasons for changing or updating standards in footnotes to the financial statements.

Prepare financial statements

The preparation of financial statements involves the process of summarizing accounting information into a standardized set of financial data. The completed financial statements are then distributed to management, lenders, creditors, and investors, who use them to evaluate the
