

Learning Objectives

Upon completion of this topic, the student should be able to:

- Distinguish between and account for direct and indirect labor as they are used in the production process.
- Identify the three activities involved in accounting for labor.
- Understand the consequences of and be able to account for employee and employer taxes and fringe benefit costs.
- Identify the guaranteed wage and incentive plans that may be used.

Labor is the physical or mental effort expended in manufacturing a product. Labor cost is the price paid for using human resources. The compensation paid to employees who engage in production-related activities represents factory labor. The principal labor cost is wages paid to production workers. Wages are payments made on an hourly, daily, or piecework basis. Salaries are fixed payments made regularly for managerial and clerical services. However, in practice, the terms "wages" and "salaries" are often incorrectly used interchangeably.

Time Card

To support the labor charged to the job, the company accountant normally maintains a record of labor cost for each job or department. Workers are provided with timecard to evidence their presence on the work site. The time card reflects the official hours of arrival and departure of each worker. In bigger manufacturing companies, they use biometric system to monitor the in and out of workers.

Time Ticket

Since the time card shows only the time a worker arrives and leaves the work site, a time ticket is manually prepared by each worker to determine the type of work and the job worked by each worker together with the time he started and stopped working during the day. This is then used as basis for distributing the payroll.

Special Problem in Factory LaborGuaranteed wage with guaranteed wage

Some manufacturing companies pay their workers according to the units they produced with guaranteed wage. In this situation, the work in process account charged with the number of unit produced multiplied by the piece rate. If a worker produces less than the amount of guaranteed wage, the difference is charged to factory overhead account.

Illustration 01: A Company's compensation scheme for its factory workers provides a combined maximum guaranteed wage and a piece rate. Each worker is paid P50 per piece with a minimum guaranteed wage of P0.100 a week (6 working days). During the first week of May, the production submitted the following output:

Employee	Unit produced
Anne	30
Angel	30
Marcel	50
Tim	40
Sam	40
Lucky	50

Determine the following: (a) The amount of labor charged to work in process and (b) The amount of labor charged to factory overhead.

Guide:

Factory workers	Labor charged to WIP	To be paid to the worker	Labor charged to FOM
Anne	1500	1500	000
Angel	1500	1500	000
Marcel	2500	2500	000
Tim	2000	2000	000
Sam	2000	2000	000
Lucky	2500	2500	000
Total	15,000	14,000	1,000

Journal Entry:

Work in Process	15,000
Factory Overhead	1,000
Accrued Payroll		14,000

Short Job

Generally, overtime premium included in the wages of laborers is charged to factory overhead. But, when a customer request for an overtime to rush his order, the overtime premium is charged to work in process account together with basic pay.

Illustration 02: The weekly time ticket indicated the following distribution of labor hours for three factory workers who worked on a rush order.

Name of worker	Rate per hour	Job 101 Reg	OT	Job 102 Reg	OT	Job 103 Reg	OT	Indirect
Carlo	P01.75	8	5	12	5	15	-	3
Tim	P02.00	10	-	10	-	3	3	0.0
Perna	P02.00	6	2	7	2	20	-	0.0
