Chester Creek Ravine Haiku:

Chester Creek Ravine Barton Sutter, 2015-04-01 The early Japanese haiku masters were indefatigable walkers Basho traveled 1 500 miles to produce a single slim volume The Narrow Road to the Deep North In a rootless 21st century society obsessed with mobility and speed Bart Sutter decided to combine Basho's practice with Thoreau's sage advice to stay home In writing Chester Creek Ravine he says I walked at least a thousand miles but I did it by covering the same 2 1 2 mile loop through Chester Creek Ravine repeatedly catching it right down the block Occasionally during those neighborhood walks Sutter had fleeting moments when the inner and the outer worlds came together in a flash of intimate imagery The 150 haiku contained in this book tiny poems with large implications conjure those revelatory moments alongside Chester Creek a stream that drops dramatically through the city of Duluth on its final run to Lake Superior Sutter honors the haiku tradition by sticking close to the classical form alluding to the seasons and choosing subjects from the natural world but his haiku are fully contemporary and include surprises too a pregnant girl with her black lab beer cans bagpipes plastic sacks while his subtle use of rhyme helps rivet these impressions in the reader's mind United States Civil Aircraft Register, 1978
