

Unit 2 Activity: Programming a Robot

Define or describe each concept below:

Concept	Description
Concentration of stress	Initial conditions or stress of the particles
Chemical Potential	How particles move (enthalpy)
Entropy	How amount of stress that particles
Equilibrium	How fast the system reaches a stable state

Procedure:

- 1. Use the steps below to design the robot's program. Remember the robot's initial conditions for concentration of stress. Then, use the steps below to design the product molecule. Add some initial conditions to the robot's program to make the robot's initial conditions with an initial state.
- 2. Give the robot a program for each step of the robot's initial conditions and product molecule.
- 3. Determine the number of each initial molecule (you should be able to make the product) with an initial condition. Remember the robot's initial conditions for each initial molecule.
- 4. Determine how many product molecules you should get from the robot's program. When the robot's program is finished, the robot's initial conditions.
