Cermark Super ViperJet MkII

PART 1

A scale ARTF that has sport-jet looks

The Cermark ViperJet MkII is a near-scale (1:42.9) model of an American full-size fighter-built jet. The full-size version is built to a very high specification which includes reinforced reinforced carbon fibre with a 1/2 inch honeycomb core. Built by aeromodelers, it allows the customer to complete their project and spend more time flying and less time fussing about it. The outstanding performance demonstrates the outstanding design and engineering skills that have gone into the project. With a mixture of power plants from mid-1980 to now for tailored to individual taste. An estimated rate-of-climb of 22,000 ft/min and speeds of 500 mph make this a most fun and very pilot's jet.

That's a description of the full-size aircraft. The model version is much the same - it is without doubt an ARTF of the best quality. It comes in the normal carbon steel construction form, with everything individually painted in bubble wrap bags which will make good covers once the model is finished.

The construction notes (24 pages with 54 photographs and master photographs with much in the way of instructions. I think that the manufacturer has assumed that anyone building this model has some experience of jet modelling. On this point with some more important points in case they could be of help to those who might find the instructions lacking. Some of my suggestions reflect personal preferences, but they are all included for safety reasons alone - all else.

When I went to build a scale model the first things I look for are details of the full-size. Colour schemes, undercarriage, lights, cockpit detail - these are the things that matter to me. When he returns the full-size ViperJet - some lights to it than the rest, with other - (go to www.cermark.com) This has loads of first class pictures of everything of interest and will be a big help to all those scale points amongst us.

Finishing

The fuselage is cut out ready to go. The glass covering is with carbon fibre reinforcement at all critical stress areas. All the 'form' cut almost grade ply formers are supplied glued in place, with the glass fibre reinforced with carbon fibre form, making a very strong structure. The water tank hole there is to save

The space under the cockpit shows the reinforcing of the former bands. Viewed from the front, showing the full-size air intake.
