

Choosing the City Dog

Bigger isn't always better, and smaller isn't always city-friendly

As we started selecting traits in dogs for hunting, retrieving, herding, ratting and guarding, we stumbled onto a bond that has been unbreakable for over 10,000 years. Through fields, frontiers and urban centers, our best friends have always been right there with us, every step of the way.

There are many things to consider when selecting a new pet. The first question shouldn't be "How do I get a dog?" Instead, make this easier for yourself in the long run and figure out why you want a dog. Do you want a running partner, a hiking buddy, a dog you can take everywhere with you, or do you want a dog because you just like dogs? Do you want a companion to curl up with you at night? Did you grow up with dogs, or is this your first foray into pet ownership?

For starters, look at the different groups of dogs. The American Kennel Club (AKC) divides dogs into seven groups (I add two more) and within each group are dozens of specific breeds, traits, and drives.

- Terriers: Most of these dogs descended from ratters and vermin hunters. They were bred to seek out problem critters ranging from rats to badgers. I would argue we need more rat terriers in my city, but that's a different tangent! Dachshunds were bred to dive head-first into badger holes, grab the vermin by the face, and pull it out to be exterminated.
