6.6.a.—Energy: It's Not All the Same to You!

In this unit, students learn about the eight energy sources, each with its own costs and benefits. This unit engages students with in-depth examination of these varied energy sources. They learn that conversion is a necessary step in the energy use process. In conducting a cost/benefit analysis, students learn to consider not only the byproducts involved in extracting, tapping, and harnessing the natural energy resources, but also the byproducts created in the conversions necessary to produce useful energy—electricity—from these natural energy resources.
