

Number Lines

Most likely you can count to 10, or 100, or maybe 1,000. You count many times every day. Every time someone asks the question, "How many?" You must count something to give them the answer. If you write down the number of things you counted, like this 1, 2, 3, 4..., you would be making a number line.

A number line is a straight line; it can be horizontal (across), vertical (up and down), or created in other directions. Sometimes a vertical number line is also called a number ladder. Most number lines are horizontal and begin at zero, but number lines can include big or small numbers, even numbers below 0.

A number line is not a ruler and cannot be used for measuring. However, since a ruler has numbers it can be used as a number line. The number line above begins with zero and ends at 15, but a number line can include larger numbers, the spaces between numbers can be narrow or wide, and a number line can include increments of 2, 3, 4, 5 or any value.

The number line above has wide spaces and only goes up to seven. The number line below also has wide spaces but it is counting by twos.

The vertical number line to the left starts at 0 and increases to 10 as it goes upward.

There are two basic rules for all number lines:

- The lines must be straight and can be in any direction.
- Numbers increase to the right (or upward) and decrease to the left (or downward).
