

Chapter 24 - Industry Comes of Age

I. The Iron Colt Becomes an Iron Horse

1. After the Civil War, railroad production grew enormously, from 35,000 mi. of track laid in 1865 to a whopping 192,556 mi. of track laid in 1900.
 - Congress gave land to railroad companies totaling 155,504,994 acres.
 - For railroad routes, companies were allowed alternate mile-square sections in checkerboard fashion, but until companies determined which part of the land was the best to use for railroad building, all of the land was withheld from all other users.
 - Grover Cleveland stopped this in 1887.
2. Railroads gave land their value; towns where railroads ran became sprawling cities while those skipped by railroads sank into ghost towns. So, obviously, towns wanted railroads in them.

II. Spanning the Continent with Rails

1. Deadlock over where to build a transcontinental railroad was broken after the South seceded, and in 1862, Congress commissioned the Union Pacific Railroad to begin westward from Omaha, Nebraska, to gold-rich California.
 - The company received huge sums of money and land to build its tracks, but corruption also plagued it, as the insiders of the Credit Mobilier reaped $23 million in profits.
 - Many Irishmen, who might lay as much as 10 miles a day, laid the tracks.
 - When Indians attacked while trying to save their land, the Irish dropped their picks and seized their rifles, and scores of workers and Indians died during construction.
2. Over in California, the Central Pacific Railroad was in charge of extending the railroad eastward, and it was backed by the Big Four, including Leland Stanford, the ex-governor of California who had useful political connections, and Collis P. Huntington, an adept lobbyist.
 - The Central Pacific used Chinese workers, and received the same incentives as the Union Pacific, but it had to drill through the hard rock of the Sierra Nevada.
3. In 1869, the transcontinental rail line was completed at Promontory Point near Ogden, Utah; in all, the Union Pacific built 1,066 mi. of track, compared to 689 mi. by the Central Pacific.

III. Binding the Country with Railroad Ties

Clio Wired Roy Rosenzweig, 2011-01-05 In these visionary essays Roy Rosenzweig charts the impact of new media on teaching, researching, preserving, presenting, and understanding history. Negotiating between the cyberenthusiasts who champion technological breakthroughs and the digital skeptics who fear the end of traditional humanistic scholarship, Rosenzweig re-envision academic historians' practices and professional rites while analyzing and advocating for amateur historians' achievements. While he addresses the perils of doing history online, Rosenzweig eloquently identifies the promises of digital work, detailing innovative strategies for powerful searches in primary and secondary sources, the increased opportunities for dialogue and debate, and most of all, the unprecedented access afforded by the Internet. Rosenzweig draws attention to the opening up of the historical record to new voices, the availability of documents and narratives to new audiences, and the attractions of digital technologies for new and diverse practitioners. Though he celebrates digital history's democratizing influences, Rosenzweig also argues that we can only ensure the future of the past in this digital age by actively resisting the efforts of corporations to put up gates and profit from the Web.
