China And Socialism Market Reforms And Class Struggle:

China and Socialism Martin Hart-Landsberg, Paul Burkett, 2005-03-01 China is the fastest growing economy in the world today. For many on the left the Chinese economy seems to provide an alternative model of development to that of neoliberal globalization. Although it is a disputed question whether the Chinese economy can be still described as socialist, there is no doubting the importance for the global project of socialism of accurately interpreting and soberly assessing its real prospects. China and Socialism argues that market reforms in China are leading inexorably toward a capitalist and foreign dominated development path with enormous social and political costs both domestically and internationally. The rapid economic growth that accompanied these market reforms have not been due to efficiency gains but rather to deliberate erosion of the infrastructure that made possible a remarkable degree of equality. The transition to the market has been based on rising unemployment, intensified exploitation, declining health and education services, exploding government debt, and unstable prices. At the same time, China's economic transformation has intensified the contradictions of capitalist development in other countries, especially in East Asia. Far from being a model that is replicable in other Third World countries, China today is a reminder of the need for socialism to be built from the grassroots up through class struggle and international solidarity.

China and Socialism; Market Reforms and Class Struggle Martin Hart-Landsberg And Paul Burkett, 2006 In China and Socialism the authors argue that market reforms in China are leading inexorably toward a capitalist and foreign dominated development path with enormous social and political costs both domestically and internationally. The rapid economic

China and Socialism Martin Hart-Landsberg, Paul Burkett, 2004 China & Socialism Martin Hart-Landsberg, Paul Burkett, 2004 Critical Perspectives on China's Economic Transformation, 2007 China's socialism and especially China's three decades long experiment in building socialism has been an issue of much interest and debate among scholars as well as practicing Marxists in India and elsewhere. They also confront the realities of post Mao China and how these have been impacting the lives of the peasants and workers in that society as well as face the question of today's China being a development model for other third world countries. In mid 2005 several editors of Critical Asian Studies formerly the Bulletin of Concerned Asian Scholars convened in a Roundtable to engage the issues raised by Martin Hart Landsberg and Paul Burkett in their book China and Socialism Market Reforms and Class Struggle. Monthly Review Press 2005. The articles published in this Roundtable along with a Rejoinder by Hart Landsberg and Burkett appeared in two issues of Critical Asian Studies 37 3 and 4 in 2005. They along with an Introduction by Hari P Sharma are reprinted here in Critical Perspectives on China's Economic Transformation in order to stimulate further discussion. As Hari P Sharma writes in the Introduction It is our task to learn the positive and negative lessons from the Chinese experience and carry on with the task of fighting and defeating imperialism and its hold wherever we live as well as lend support to the struggles for national liberation and for socialism wherever they take place Critical Perspectives On China S Economic Transformation: A Critical Asian
