101-102) demonstrated that both α and β subunits of Ca^{2+} channels, at high pH , are major basic ion-exchange sites and, consequently, allowing all negatively charged groups (including carboxyl groups) to bind protons, whereas basic groups (including amino groups) are excluded. Ionized glutamate and glutamine residues are excluded, whereas ionized aspartate and asparagine residues are included. This is consistent with the observation that glutamate and aspartate residues are the major sites of Ca^{2+} binding in both voltage- and ligand-gated Ca^{2+} channels.

strongly influenced by the social environment and culture, and values of the population regarding dignity, integrity and autonomy are in the foreground of the research. Furthermore, it aims to improve professional knowledge of nurses and to provide them with ethical decision-making skills. The research is carried out in the form of a qualitative study, using semi-structured interviews. The results of the study will be used to develop a training programme for nurses in the field of ethics, and to improve the ethical climate of the hospital.

It is interesting that at somewhat intermediate levels of financial stress, employees neither use nor implement money saving strategies (only 10% of respondents did either at levels of 10 percent, compared with 16 percent doing so below 10% and 20 percent above 20%). Furthermore, it may be useful to explore whether financial stressors impact more on those individuals who are already using money saving strategies.

Agencies that have not an independent research budget will be less likely to conduct such efforts and therefore will be unlikely to produce important research on important issues of national security or public health.
