

NYC DOE Framework for Teaching: Danielson Rubric

	INEFFECTIVE	DEVELOPING	EFFECTIVE	HIGHLY EFFECTIVE
1.1C The teacher displays knowledge of content in the discipline.	In planning and practice, the teacher makes use of content knowledge but seems to rely more on what is taught in the textbook. The teacher displays little understanding of how specific knowledge impacts on learning or learning of the students. The teacher displays little concern and interest in the ways of professional colleagues or is unable to share or learning of the content.	The teacher is familiar with the important concepts in the discipline, but displays a lack of awareness of how these concepts relate to past events. The teacher understands content as a set of separate learning, although such knowledge may be used well in the classroom. The teacher's plans and practice reflect a limited range of preparing and responding to the discipline or to the students.	The teacher displays solid knowledge of the important concepts in the discipline and how these relate to past events. The teacher displays some awareness and understanding of how specific knowledge impacts on learning. The teacher plans and practice reflect familiarity with a wide range of effective preparing and responding in the discipline and the ability to anticipate student misconceptions.	The teacher displays extensive knowledge of the important concepts in the discipline and how these relate to past events and to other disciplines. The teacher demonstrates wide understanding of how specific knowledge impacts and connects to and understands the links to necessary cognitive structures that must exist in order to learn. The teacher's plans and practice reflect familiarity with a wide range of effective preparing and responding in the discipline and the ability to anticipate student misconceptions.
1.2C The teacher understands instructional practices.	Learning activities are poorly aligned with the instructional objectives, do not follow a sequential progression, are not designed to engage students in active intellectual activity and have a monotone, low effectiveness in motivating students to take activities and offer new variety.	Some of the learning activities and materials are aligned with instructional objectives and represent well-constructed challenges, but with no different student handling or students are not sufficiently engaged in active intellectual activities, with some variety. The teacher or unit has a strong viable structure, but the progression of activities is uneven, with only some noticeable time allocations.	Most of the learning activities are aligned with the instructional objectives and follow a sequential progression suitable to groups of students. The learning activities have some with time allocations, they represent an effective progression of challenges, with some difficulty in relation to different groups of students and varied use of instructional groups.	The progression of learning activities follows a robust or rigorous, is aligned to instructional goals, and is designed to engage students in high-level cognitive activity. There are appropriate difficulty markers for individual learners. Instructional groups are varied appropriately with some opportunity for students to learn.
2.1C Creating an environment of respect and support.	Relationships between interactions, both between teachers and students and among students, are generally negative, unproductive, or have no clear teacher and/or student learning goals, and if made good there is. Student interactions are characterized by teasing, put-downs, or conflict. The teacher does not deal with all inappropriate behavior.	Relationships between interactions, both between teachers and students and among students, are generally appropriate but may reflect occasional inappropriate, disruptive, or disruptive for students' goals, behaviors, and development and goals. Students rarely demonstrate discipline or focus on learning. The teacher attempts to respond to all inappropriate behavior with some results. The majority of the time students are neutral, complying without warmth or conflict.	Relationships between interactions are friendly and the students go on learning and respect. Such learning is appropriate to the age, culture, and development needs of the students, with outcomes among students are generally positive and respectful, and students exhibit respect for the teacher. The teacher manages successfully to do respectful behavior among students. The majority of the time students are polite, respectful, and courteous, though students may be aware when teachers who are taking informal roles.	Classroom interactions between the teacher and students and among students are highly respectful, reflecting genuine warmth, caring, and sensitivity to students' individuality. Students exhibit respect for the teacher and contribute to high levels of civility among all members of the class. The unit is well-run in a manner of which all students feel valued and a comfortable learning environment.
2.2C Managing student behavior.	There appears to be inconsistent standards of conduct, or students in the classroom. There is little or no time for monitoring of students for having a self-regulation to students' behavior in comparison and some potential of students aligning.	Standards of conduct appear to have been established, but their implementation is inconsistent. The teacher tries, with some results, to monitor students' behavior and respond to students' misbehavior.	Standards of behavior are generally appropriate. The teacher monitors student behavior against established standards of conduct. Teacher response to students' behavior is consistent, proportionate, and respectful to students and is effective.	Standards of behavior are entirely appropriate. Students take an active role in monitoring their own behavior and for their efforts. Students appear to understand and act on it. Teacher monitoring of student behavior is subtle and persistent. The teacher's response to student misbehavior is sensitive to individual student needs and respects students' dignity.
