Who Speaks for Nature? Todd A. Eisenstadt, Karleen Jones West, 2019-03-14 Using the first national survey in Ecuador featuring an oversample of Amazon indigenous communities this path breaking book argues that how vulnerable or exposed people have been to environmental degradation determines how strongly they feel about saving the environment Rather than emphasizing ethnic identity or stakeholders ideological pre dispositions towards environmentalism the authors argue that on the front lines of environmental conservation peoples views are driven by personal experiences of vulnerability Using the survey and hundreds of interviews across Ecuador over three years the authors also argue that the creation of interest groups across ethnic and class lines is more effective in promoting environmental activism than more traditional approaches involving only ethnic or partisan affinity groups

Nuclear Power in Britain and Germany: Trust, Democracy, and Futures Christian Götter, 2025-07-28 Split into two volumes volume 2 is a cultural history of technology that provides new insights into the international history of nuclear energy by examining the perspectives of six nuclear power plants host communities in Britain and Germany from the 1950s to the late 1980s Based upon a continuous qualitative analysis of the public debates in these communities this book demonstrates that the societal conflicts about atomic power were never confined to the risks of one exceptional energy technology. Instead they were shaped by larger societal issues which they in turn heavily influenced. Therefore the local discourses about nuclear energy provide an insight into transformations the British and German societies underwent during the Cold War. The book will be of value for scholars and students interested in the history of technology, environmental, political and contemporary history as well as science and technology studies. It will be of interest to researchers and members of the public interested in the local history of Biblis Hinkley Point, Lingens Oldbury on Severn, Stade and Torness as well as the wider public interested in the ongoing debates about nuclear power as a source of energy and a potential answer to the challenges of climate change.

Averting the Apocalypse Arthur Bonner, 1990-02-20 There are two Indias: the caste and class elite who hold all power and make up 10 to 15 percent of the population, and everyone else. Averting the Apocalypse is about everyone else. Arthur Bonner, a former New York Times reporter with long experience as a foreign correspondent in Asia, conducted interviews over many months while traveling almost 20,000 miles within India, seeking out the underclass and social activists who together are beginning to mobilize for social change at the bottom of Indian society. Working in areas torn by violence, Bonner offers a terrifyingly accurate portrait of a society bloodied by decades of unequal social structure and the absence of a civil society and political mechanism capable of responding to the exploitation of the poor and weak. Bonner finds that India's inability or refusal to address its debilitating social structure may be the precursor to an apocalyptic social upheaval unless heed is paid to the social movements that his first-hand investigation reveals.
